Summer Heat and Diabetes

This summer, Canada has already had one heat wave with record breaking temperatures. It's looking like the rest of our summer will have more extremes of temperature and extreme weather. All of this heat can affect and be challenging for people living with Diabetes. Keeping blood sugar levels under control can be more challenging in hot weather.

The important things to do in hot, humid weather are:

- ✓ Monitor your blood sugar levels closely.
- ✓ Be aware of and watch out for symptoms that your body is not coping well with the heat.
- ✓ Take action before things get serious.

Mild-moderate dehydration looks like:	More severe dehydration looks like:
Tiredness Less urine Increase in thirst Dizziness/light-headedness Headaches Dry mouth Dry eyes	Excessive thirst Dark-colored urine Low blood pressure Rapid heart rate

People living with Diabetes get dehydrated faster than those living without Diabetes.

Dehydration can make blood sugar levels to rise. When this happens, a need to urinate more frequently may develop and that will make the dehydration worse.

So...what can we do?

We can carefully manage Diabetes in the summer months by taking action with the following tips:

Drink water!! Make sure your fluid intake stays up but pass on the sugary drinks.

Dress weather appropriate: breezy lightweight fabrics to help keep you cool.

Avoid alcohol: this will make you urinate more and you will end up losing more fluids.

Check blood glucose levels more often: this includes before and after activities.

When outdoors: stick to the shade as much as possible.

Exercise with air-conditioning: or if you prefer outdoors, fit in the workout early in the morning before it gets too hot.

Understand your medications: some might have warnings about heat.
